Upon resigning, SUBJECT was accused of selling out to the other political factions. He remained unemployed from November 1949 to April 1950, at which time SUBJECT decided to visit Vienna with the hope of finding a position comparable to his abilities. In Vienna, SUBJECT was referred by the Austrian Labor Office to the chemical firm GLANZSTOFF, a USIA enterprise in St Pölten, Lower Austria; in applying for this position, SUBJECT was informed that the vacancy had been filled. On the same day, SUBJECT visited the Soviet-sponsored information library located in the city. An unknown person engaged SUBJECT in a conversation referred him to Johannes LEBISSCHAK, an Austrian teacher, and local director of Austrian-Soviet cultural affairs, who was present in the room at the same time. LEBISSCHAK reportedly had been looking for an assistant. SUBJECT approached LEBISSCHAK and inquired about this position. Following interview, SUBJECT was accepted by LEBISSCHAK, who revealed that | |

he was the local director of the GESELLSCHAFT FUER PFLEGE DER KULTURWELLEN UND WIRTSCHAFTLICHEN BEZIEHUNGEN ZWISCHEN OESTERREICH UND USSR (Association for the Cultivation of Cultural and Economic Relations Between Austria and the USSR) with headquarters in Palais Coburg, Vienna I, Seilerstrasse 1. Other colleagues of this organization named by LEBISSCHAK were Professor (Inn) WOTKOFF, Vienna, and Professor (Inn) WEILLER, Tulln Realgymnasium. SUBJECT was assigned the responsibility of visiting the Burgemeisters of all the towns in Lower Austria and making the necessary arrangements for the presentation of an A. S. Pushkin Exhibition (Works of the noted Soviet poet) in every large school. For this service, SUBJECT received 50 schillings a day which included traveling expenses.

During the following weeks, LEBISSCHAK accompanied SUBJECT so that he would be properly oriented in his new duties. On 10 May 1950, upon contacting the Bezirkshauptmann (town administrator) in Krems, Lower Austria, they were informed that the exhibition was a Communist propaganda feature and that it would not be displayed in the schools of Krems. LEBISSCHAK, accompanied by SUBJECT, thereupon proceeded to the local Soviet Kommandatura. Upon presenting his identification card, which SUBJECT did not see, LEBISSCHAK was treated with special courtesy by the Soviet official, and his problem was quickly settled when the Soviet Kommandatura called the Bezirkshauptmann and ordered him to place the exhibition on display.

During the holiday season, 1-4 June 1950, LEBISSCHAK invited SUBJECT to accompany him on a pleasure trip to Vienna. While in Vienna, LEBISSCHAK took SUBJECT to the Bellaria Soviet Kommandatura where he introduced SUBJECT to Lt. General DOMININ, Soviet officer (about 35, 5'7", 165 lbs.; black hair, ruffled; slender build; drives blue Skoda), who was referred to as a cultural officer. LEBISSCHAK told SUBJECT to contact DOMININ, should any difficulties be encountered in presenting the Pushkin exhibition in the towns surrounding metropolitan Vienna. SUBJECT was then taken to the Palais Coburg, a Soviet social club in Vienna, where he was introduced to the following persons:

(Professor) Robert BLECHSTEINER, 60, Volkenkunde Museum (Museum of Peoples History), Tel. A-35447, Vienna I, Hofburg Palace; liaison official between Soviets and Austrian KPOe.

In July 1950, SUBJECT was visiting his mother in Salzburg, and by chance met Lt. Sergie DOMININ, dressed in civilian clothes.
DOMININ was very hospitable and entertained SUBJECT in a local cafe.
On 15 January 1951, SUBJECT was sent to Klosterneuburg, to put on the above-mentioned exhibition, but was denied permission by Schu-rat P. SIMMER, at Langstogergasse 25. SUBJECT telephoned DOMININ at the Bellaria, but was referred to the Kommandatura in Kloster-neuburg, where Lt. DOMININ had recently been installed as Kommando-tura Officer. After being informed of this incident, DOMININ immediately called SIMMER and ordered him to display the exhibition.
That evening SUBJECT was invited as a guest of DOMININ to visit the Soviet social club, Palais Coburg. DOMININ drank heavily until late in the evening when he appeared to be quite intoxicated. In a conversation with SUBJECT over the Korean War, DOMININ pointed out the strength of the North Korean forces in their most recent offensive against the United Nations forces. When SUBJECT doubted DOM-ININ's intimate knowledge of the strength of these Communist forces, DOMININ became infuriated and in a sudden fit of rage threw his glass against the wall and exclaimed, "Why shouldn't I know! I'm the NKVD." Immediately thereafter, two officers sitting near by picked up DOMININ and carried him out of the room. Following this scene, another patron, Gerhard HEMELDT, Muenchen, Thierschstrasse, an announcer for the Bayrische Rundfunk (Bavarian radio station) came over to SUBJECT and stated that DOMININ was remembered as a member of the Soviet Repatriation Mission, at Dachau, Germany, from 1946 to 1948. On the next day DOMININ called SUBJECT and inquired if he (DOMININ) had said anything unusual the night before. SUB-JECT assured DOMININ that he could not recall very much of their conversation, since he himself was also somewhat inebriated. This reply seemed to relieve DOMININ's anxiety.

On 9 February 1951, SUBJECT reported to LEBISSLCHAK, and remarked about DOMININ's excessive drinking. LEBISSLCHAK became somewhat concerned and inquired if DOMININ, while inebriated, had discussed his work with SUBJECT. Upon receiving a negative reply, LEBISSLCHAK severely criticized DOMININ for his excessive drinking, and stated that in view of his important position and that both DOMININ and he were "brothers" (Austrian idiom which indicates membership or participation in the same organization), he felt very much concerned about him. SUBJECT was then invited to have lunch at LEBISSLCHAK's home. While they were sitting in the living room, a Soviet officer (nu), who was recognized as the Kommandatura officer at Krems, came into the house and left a large loose-leaf notebook with LEBISSLCHAK before departing. LEBISSLCHAK laid the notebook on a table and went into the kitchen for a few moments. SUBJECT, being somewhat curious, quickly scanned the contents and noted that it contained political reports from the Communist Party of Salzburg, as well as other towns in the Soviet Zone of Austria. It also included a local situation report from the Krems Kommandatura. SUBJECT was unable to learn more about the contents of the notebook because LEBISSLCHAK returned suddenly from the kitchen and carried the notebook away. In view of previous events, SUBJECT came to the conclusion that LEBISSLCHAK is probably an important Soviet intelligence agent who correlates reports of other Soviet intelligence agents operating in the Soviet Zone of Austria.
